

Shenee Johnson Holloway

About Me

Public Servant, Educational Leader for Gwinnett County Public Schools, and advocate for equity in Family and Community Engagement

Shenée Johnson Holloway is a native of Tallahassee, Florida. There she earned her Bachelor of Science degree in Journalism from Florida A&M University in 1998. She relocated to Charlotte, North Carolina after college, where she worked as a reporter and copy editor for the Charlotte Post Newspaper, and later began teaching English to high school, middle school, and adult learners. She relocated to Duluth, Georgia in 2004, and began teaching middle school for Gwinnett County Public Schools and adult education at Gwinnett Technical College. She earned her Master of Arts in Teaching Secondary English from Mercer University in 2009, and her passion for equity with family engagement grew when she became the Parent Instructional Coordinator for Duluth High School, a new Title I School, in 2016. This shift in her career path led her to pursue community outreach opportunities through the City of Duluth as a member of the city's LEAD (Learn, Engage, Advance Duluth) Cohort class of 2018, the Citizens Budget Advisory Committee class of 2019, and a 2-year appointed term on the city's Ethics Board during the spring of 2021. During the same time, she also completed one of Gwinnett County's leadership cohorts known as Glance Gwinnett.

Shenée earned a second Master's in Educational Leadership from Mercer University, was awarded Teacher of the Year in 2012-2013, awarded the MVP (Most Valuable Person) Award for the Duluth High School's graduating class of 2018, was a finalist for The School Superintendents Association (AASA) Women in School Leadership Award and for the Gwinnett Chamber's Moxie Awards both in 2020. Shenée received an Executive Certificate in Public Leadership from Harvard Kennedy School in 2022 as she continues to serve in the community as an advisory board member for Adult Education with Gwinnett Technical College, as former president for the Duluth-Norcross Kiwanis Club, and as Commissioner with the City of Duluth's Planning Commission. She is currently a Coordinator for Family and Community Engagement with Gwinnett County Public Schools, and she is the loving and proud mommy to the multi-talented Alaylah Janée, junior at Gwinnett County Public School's "School of the Arts (SOTA)" at Central Gwinnett High School. Shenée will further her advocacy for families and work in the community for what she considers "a necessary seat at the table."